College Now Spring 2025 Classes

NEW PAF 3110 - Advocacy and Protest in Social Movements (3 credits)

This course examines the advocacy, protest, and organizing strategies of activists and social movement leaders working for the equity and justice of groups marginalized according to race, gender, class, ethnicity, citizenship, sexuality, ability, or religion. The course will focus on the coalition-building and agitation tactics of one or more social movements to explore: their constraints and obstacles; their use of oral, written, embodied, and mediated forms of protest; the impact and implications of their strategies; and the responses to their activism.

ANT 1001 - Introduction to Cultural Anthropology (3 credits)

Cultural anthropology draws on the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences to explore human variation in peoples' practices, values, identities, and institutions, and the nature of human conflict. ANT 1001 challenges students to critically examine: what is "cultural," what is "natural?" How do race, class, gender, sexuality, science and technology, politics and the economy, and globalization shape the contemporary world? Regardless of the focus—arts and sciences, business, or policymaking—anthropology equips students to engage a multi-cultural and interconnected world.

BUS 2000 - Business Fundamentals (3 credits)

This course stresses five pillars essential for success in business: (1) quantitative analysis; (2) communication skills; (3) ethical decision-making; (4) research; and (5) globalization. Students will write memos and reports, make oral presentations, and use Excel to model and solve business problems. Students in the class will conduct a comprehensive research study - the Shadow-a-Company project. This research project requires students to collect and analyze comprehensive business data about a prominent company and formulate strategy for the company. The research project enhances the students' understanding of real-world business, emphasizing the five pillars and problem-solving skills, using the analytical methods covered in the course.

COM 1010 - Speech Communication (3 credits)

This course provides training and practice in the preparation and delivery of original speeches, encourages the use of clear language, develops students' awareness of intellectual and ethical aspects of communication, and promotes critical thinking and academic research. This course is required for Baruch undergraduate degrees.

SOC 1005 - Introductory Sociology (3 credits)

This course is a survey of sociological perspectives—particularly social interactionism, functionalism, and conflict theory. It focuses on the role of culture in shaping behavior patterns; key social institutions, such as the family, work, and religion; and the ways that globalization and multiculturalism are altering contemporary social life.

PSY 1001 - General Psychology (3 credits)

This course introduces students to the scientific study of human behavior. It covers the basic psychological processes of thinking, motivation, perception, and learning, and the significance of the brain in mediating these processes. It examines the normal personality, how it develops, and how it functions in a social context. Psychological disorders are also discussed. Students will learn about psychology as a science through both direct [e.g. primary sources and research participation] and indirect [e.g. secondary sources and class lectures] experience with psychological research.

FIN 1601 - Personal Finance (3 credits)

Discusses the problems involved in efficient handling of personal finance and consumption expenditure, including consumer protection, taxation, insurance, home financing, and methods of borrowing and investing money. Acceptable as a non-business elective for certain Baruch Business majors, but not acceptable as an elective for major for Finance or Economics majors.

HED 1911 - Critical Health Issues (3 credits)

A study of current critical health issues and the individual's role in society with major emphasis upon the areas of human sexuality, drug abuse, environmental pollution, physical fitness, and diet.
